

July 6, 1983, p. 7

Drew will get arrested so that they can have him hospitalized for his drug problem. "What shall I do? What shall I do?" asked Jean. John advised her to get in touch with a lawyer at once. Sound advice. I hope she follows it. At about 10 minutes to eleven, we left and John drove me back here and was on his way. At 8 AM on July 4th, WSP picked me up in the Eagle, and I rode out in the country with him. I drank a cup of coffee with WSP + HLRP and then returned here and packed up my Maplewood production and drove up to John's and picked him up and the portable generator that his father is allowing me to borrow. I sat and drank a cup of coffee with John's parents and we then went to Maplewood and began setting up. The generator worked perfectly. Given the length of the extension cords that John's father provided, the sound of the generator was barely audible at the "show site". Mason and John arrived and set up the videotape equipment -- it too was run on power supplied by the portable generator. John and I stuck about 10 flags in the ground around the various veterans' graves in the area where the ceremonies would take place. I hoisted the ¹⁴Parte Avenue flag (hung on a dowel as a banner) up the flag pole and John and I stuck it in the ground near the grave of Alexander Bryden. As we stuck the pole in the ground, John commented that it reminded him of the very famous Iwo Jima Marine bronze: "Talk about Iwo Jima," said JTB. We laughed. After the sound system (my Sony + speaker) was set up, we tested it out and to my extreme joy the sound carried beautifully. John and I listened to the music (about 1/2 of the tape) before anyone else arrived. What an incredible morning it turned out to be. It